Hematological Neoplasms

Message from the Guest Editor

The group of hematological neoplasms covers a wide range of diseases, such as acute myeloid and lymphoid leukemias, myelodysplastic and myeloproliferative syndromes, lymphoproliferative syndromes, and monoclonal gammopathies. We invite researchers and authors to submit original work concerning important findings in the biological, clinical, translational, or computational research that would result in a better characterization of those diseases in order to improve the diagnostic tools and treatment approaches. Review articles that describe the state-of-the-art on this topic are also encouraged.

- Cytogenetics
- Flow cytometry
- Next-generation sequencing
- Biomarkers
- Response and outcome prediction
- Bioinformatics
- Animal models
- Acute leukemia
- Myelodysplastic and myeloproliferative syndromes
- Lymphoproliferative syndromes
- Monoclonal gammopathies
