Predictive Biomarkers in Oncology

Message from the Guest Editor

Advances in precision medicine have highlighted the critical role of predictive biomarkers in oncology, enabling tailored therapies and improving patient outcomes. This Special Issue focuses on the discovery, validation, and clinical application of biomarkers that predict treatment response, resistance, and prognosis in cancer. We invite original research, reviews, and perspectives on cutting-edge technologies (e.g., genomics, proteomics, liquid biopsy) and their integration into clinical decision making. Topics include novel biomarker identification, computational modeling, and translational challenges in diverse cancer types. By compiling the latest advancements, this Special Issue aims to foster innovation in personalized oncology and guide future research directions.
