Diagnosis and Management in Digestive Surgery: 2nd Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue is intended to serve as an opportunity to provide an update in terms of the diagnosis and management of digestive diseases. We have all witnessed to some extent the technical and technological development within the medical field. Nevertheless, due to rapid changes, self-actualization can be occasionally strenuous. The methods of diagnosis but also management have undergone serious modifications with the passage of time, hence the utility of this Special Issue. Whether we are talking about improved precision when determining the type of pathology or tailored multidisciplinary treatment, the field of digestive diseases is in constant change. Interesting diagnoses or fascinating management techniques can be submitted as an article for publication. Research articles, review articles, and special case reports are invited.
