

Special Issue

Emergency Medicine: Diagnosis and Management

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to improve the care of patients with diagnosis and treatment of emergency medicine by acquiring, discussing, distributing, and promoting evidence-based information relevant to emergency physicians. In particular, we welcome articles related to the diagnostics of emergency patients, including but not limited to the risk stratification of emergencies and critical illnesses, and the diagnosis of a certain disease/complication/syndrome. The issue will publish original articles, reviews, technical notes, and case reports covering all aspects of emergency medicine, including but not limited to pre-hospital care, disasters, trauma, neurovascular disease, respiratory failure, sepsis, cardiovascular disease, community-acquired infections, paediatric emergencies, clinical toxicology, emergency nursing care, and occupational medicine.
