Special Issue

Exploring Gynecological Pathology and Imaging

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue attempts to update our knowledge on the imaging and pathology of very common cancers (such as breast, ovarian, and endometrial cancer). The diagnosis and treatment of gynecological cancer is an ever-evolving topic in tandem with technology and scientific developments. The introduction of new diagnostic methods and the advances in current imaging and pathology tools allow the precise characterization of tumors before treatment is conducted, and new technologies such as artificial intelligence could allow individualized treatments and the prediction of prognosis. We look forward to receiving manuscripts on the diagnosis, treatment, and prognosis of patients with gynecological cancers.
