Insights in Maternal-Fetal Medicine—Preventing Preterm Births

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue focuses on clinical innovations and advanced research in preventing preterm birth from the maternal-fetal medicine perspective. The articles in this issue aim to address the multifaceted nature of preterm birth, exploring new approaches, interventions, predictive models and personalized care plans to mitigate risks, prolong gestation and decrease preterm birth rates. In addition to discussing the latest medical interventions, this Special Issue emphasizes the importance of collaborative and interdisciplinary efforts in advancing maternal-fetal medicine. Insights from obstetricians, neonatologists, geneticists and other experts collectively contribute to a holistic understanding of preterm birth, fostering a more effective and comprehensive approach to prevention. This Special Issue aims to critically examine and consolidate the latest research and clinical advancements in preterm birth prevention. Through a multidisciplinary approach, the issue aims to promote a deeper comprehension of the diverse factors contributing to preterm births and clarify innovative methods for effective prevention, ultimately improving maternal and neonatal outcomes.
