

Special Issue

Diagnosis and Management of Liver Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

Advances in the field of diagnostics of liver diseases have been spurred by the development of increasingly accurate biomarkers or image modality that have helped to revolutionize diagnostic accuracy and provided increased precision in targeted therapeutics. This Special Issue welcomes contributions covering the current aspects of diagnosis and management of liver diseases. Submissions may include articles of current original research, new experimental methodology, and/or review articles summarizing the current state of the art for clinical diagnosis, state-of-the-art treatment, and management of liver disease. Discussions of current drawbacks to diagnostic accuracy and future directions for improved accuracy and management are welcome. I look forward to scrutinizing your contributions.
