Diagnosis and Management for Obstetric and Gynecologic Diseases

Message from the Guest Editor

When a novel diagnostic system is proposed, a new strategy of clinical management for corresponding diseases must be developed. Currently, more effective diagnostic tools for infertility, perinatal disorders, and gynecologic cancers are required in OB and GYN.

Based on this background, this Special Issue focuses on new waves of approaches to diagnosis and management in the fields of reproductive medicine, perinatology, and gynecologic oncology. Proposals of new diagnostic markers, methods, and techniques or new strategies of clinical management are welcome. Animal experiments that can lead to development of clinical diagnosis and management are also acceptable. We warmly invite experts who contribute original research articles or reviews.
