Advances in Diagnosis and Treatment of Porphyrrias

Message from the Guest Editor

The aim of this Special Issue is to provide the readers with the latest advances in the diagnosis and treatment of porphyrias. The volume will be intended for clinicians working in emergency, internal and general medicine, laboratory, gastroenterology, hematology, dermatology, medical genetics, neurology, neurology and psychology/psychiatric units. Among the topics, we will consider biochemical and/or genetic diagnosis of porphyrias, covering from classical to the latest laboratory techniques, including the quality control schemes, such as algorithms for differential diagnosis, available for porphyrias. Clinical and/or genetic epidemiology and natural history data of these diseases will be included as well.
