Labor Market Dynamics and Wage Inequality: Econometric Models of Income Distribution

Message from the Guest Editor

The aim of this Special Issue is to showcase cutting-edge econometric models that illuminate the mechanisms behind income distribution trends. We welcome both theoretical and applied contributions featuring rigorous econometric analysis. Potential topics include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Advanced panel data methods for analyzing wage dynamics and inequality trends;
- Structural econometric models of labor market behavior and wage determination;
- Machine learning approaches to modeling high-dimensional wage data;
- Causal inference methods for evaluating labor market policies;
- Spatial econometric techniques for regional wage inequality analysis;
- Time series econometrics of aggregate wage distributions;
- Quantile regression and distributional analysis of wage disparities.

We look forward to receiving your methodological innovations and empirical applications.
