

Special Issue

International Trade and Its Intersection with Development, Labor, and Public Economics

Message from the Guest Editor

International trade flows can affect the labor markets and the public finances of open economies. Developing countries may experience even stronger versions of such effects due to their fragile institutions and their financial constraints. For this Special Issue of Economies we welcome submissions on any topic related to international trade and its intersection with development, labor, and public economics. Topics include but are not limited to: Compensation for workers displaced by import competition, export promotion, foreign direct investment, informal economy, labor productivity, poverty, regional trade agreements, returns to human capital and/or skills, safeguards against import competition, tax compliance, tax reforms, trade in services, trade liberalization, unemployment, value added tax, and wage inequality.
