

Special Issue

Emerging Issues and Advancing Research on Dental Education and Training

Message from the Guest Editor

Welcome to Education Sciences. As an MDPI journal that publishes comprehensive full-length research papers with the scope to substantively address current issues in education, the journal has a section for healthcare professions' education. More specifically, the importance of developing and improving Medical and Dental Education has made researchers and educators aware of the need to produce knowledge and implement new practices. Thus, it is necessary to share this information in an open-access format worldwide with our dental colleagues and reduce the inequalities in dental education between developed and developing countries. This Special Issue intends to include high-quality articles that are solving educational research problems, and that report on the latest developments and findings in education in the fields of dental medicine, dental hygiene, dental technology, medicine, other dental-affiliated areas, including basic science, clinical, continuing, and postgraduate education, as well as patient education.
