Intercultural Education

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to analyze the potential of intercultural education as a social and educational tool for the improvement of school coexistence and intercultural interaction. One of the constituent traits of today's society is its cultural diversity. Pluralism and heterogeneity are traits of complex societies and in permanent social and cultural change. In the moments we live, it is essential to promote a positive view of cultural diversity as an enriching element for the construction of a democratic coexistence and intercultural citizenship.
