

Special Issue

Faith, Religion, and Global Higher Education

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to speak to these current debates and go beyond them, particularly from a global perspective, by featuring empirical research papers, reviews of research studies, theoretical/conceptual discussions, and technical reports. The broad goals of the Special Issue are to explore whether and how religion is an important factor in higher education student affairs, how to (re)conceptualize religion and the ways in which it is negotiated at the institutional levels with other pervasive factors such as globalization, and to highlight interventions as well as innovations in both knowledge (re)production and dissemination—all from an international and comparative education perspective.
