Body-Related Attitudes, Self-Esteem, and Psychological Wellbeing

Message from the Guest Editors

Contemporary societies are increasingly shaped by practices that modify, enhance, or present the body in line with personal and sociocultural ideals. From cosmetic procedures and tattooing to fitness regimes and everyday beautification rituals, these practices both reflect and construct body-related attitudes that have profound implications for self-esteem and psychological wellbeing. This Special Issue invites interdisciplinary contributions that advance understanding of how body-related attitudes are developed, expressed, and negotiated, and how they influence mental health, identity, and quality of life.

- Topics of Interest:

We welcome original articles (both qualitative and quantitative analyses, as well as cross-sectional and longitudinal studies), systematic reviews, and meta-analyses. Topics of interest include, but are not limited to, the following areas:

- Cosmetic procedures
- Body modification
- Beautification practices
- Fitness practices
- Body image, self-esteem, and wellbeing across the lifespan

The Editorial Team encourages submissions from all academic levels, ranging from doctoral and early career researchers to highly experienced scholars.
