Message from the Guest Editor

The Special Issue of the open-access journal Electronics aims to present both review and research articles on the subject of microwave devices and their applications. Microwave devices may be classified into two groups: passive devices (isolators, attenuators, phase shifters, circulators, directional couplers, waveguide tees, etc) and active devices (klystrons, magnetrons, travelling wave tubes, solid-state amplifiers and oscillators, mixers, etc). A plethora of applications of microwave devices exist including satellite communications, microwave ovens, RF Identification, radars, wifi, Bluetooth, hotspot, IoT, medical applications, food processing applications, particle accelerators, miniaturized bulk acoustic wave (BAW) filters, etc. The present Special Issue presents review and research articles illustrating different microwave devices and their applications, including recent advances and emerging trends.
