Advanced Research in Technology and Information Systems

Message from the Guest Editors

The domains of Information Systems and Technology are constantly growing, providing a plethora of research topics as well as multiple career opportunities.

Information Systems serves as the nexus of technology, processes, and people, and fosters innovations in various domains throughout a wide variety of subjects for research such as Databases, Artificial intelligence (NLP, Deep Learning, Machine Learning) Programming, Information Systems Analysis and Design. The recent Technology advancements and Internet infrastructure bring benefits to worldwide communities throughout Smart cities, Smart Governance and Smart Education, and increase the emergence of IoT and “smart” capabilities of electronic sensors. This Special Issue of Electronics Journal, entitled Advanced Research in Technology and Information Systems aims to reunite in a single volume the most recent discoveries “within Business and Public sector” in the form of original research manuscripts and also reviews on relevant subjects for this collection. The implications related to technology and Information systems in higher education curricula are also welcome in this SI.
