Bioelectronic Technologies and Artificial Intelligence for Medical Diagnosis and Healthcare

Message from the Guest Editors

The application of electronic findings to biology and medicine has significantly impacted health and wellbeing. Recent technology advances have allowed the development of new systems that can provide diagnostic information on portable point-of-devices or smartphones. We are inviting original research work covering novel theories, innovative methods, and meaningful applications that can potentially lead to significant advances. Keywords covering the Special Issue topic include:

- Chronic and acute pathologies;
- Cognitive and neurodegenerative disorders;
- Noninvasive physical sensing, e.g., vital functions;
- Medical imaging, including cellular;
- Machine learning and deep learning in biomedical sciences;
- Clinical decision support and reliability of decisions;
- Medical datasets and health technologies assessment;
- Health monitoring and compliance, also personalized;
- Rehabilitation, including home healthcare and independent living;
- Electronic health record systems, including personal;
- Data collection technologies and devices;
- Diagnostic speed, accuracy and reliability; and
- Regulatory science.
