Applied Smart Devices for Energy Storage Systems

Message from the Guest Editors

As an interdisciplinary international journal, Electronics publishes comprehensive articles on materials science, physics, chemistry, electrochemistry, electronics, energy, engineering, and other fields, specifically on the generation and release, transport and admittance, and functions and applications of electrons/ions.

Letters are preliminary reports that communicate new and important findings. Regular research papers are complete reports of new results and their analysis and discussion. Review articles critically and constructively examine developments in areas of electrons that are of broad interest and importance. Educational papers discuss important concepts for which its understanding is vital to advances in theoretical and experimental aspects of electronic/physical/chemical/electrochemical reactions. We are committed to processing manuscripts in the shortest possible time and to speeding up the efficiency of publication while maintaining the quality of the manuscript.
