

Special Issue

Control of Mobile Robots

Message from the Guest Editor

Controlling robots in order to make their behavior purposeful, safe, and effective is an intensive area of research today. Robots are assigned various tasks and must be adapted to changing environments and conditions. In addition to artificial intelligence and autonomous driving, which are the most exploited tech news themes, other areas related to robotics and robot control, such as communication, cooperative work, nanorobotics, human–robot interfaces and interaction, and emotion expression and perception, are worthy of our attention.

Topics of interest for this Special Issue include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Robot perception
- Mapping
- Navigation
- Motion planning
- Task planning
- Estimation and learning for robotics systems
- Human–robot interaction
- Multi-robot control.
