The Role of Diet and Food as Sources of Pollutants

Message from the Guest Editors

Food is a route of entry for contaminants into the human body. Contaminants such as toxic metals, pesticides, trace elements, and other substances enter the human body through the diet. However, due to the great variability of food and food origin, differences can be found in the content of contaminants in food. For example, organic foods, vegan diets, and functional foods, among others. Therefore, this Special Issue aims to bring together scientific or review articles on the content of contaminants in different types of food and their impact on health.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Foods (ISSN 2304-8158) is an open access and peer reviewed scientific journal that publishes original articles, critical reviews, case reports, and short communications on food science. Articles are released monthly online, with unlimited free access. Currently, Foods has been indexed by the Science Citation Index Expanded (SCIE - Web of Science), PubMed, and Scopus. Our aim is to encourage scientists, researchers, and other food professionals to publish their experimental and theoretical results as much detail as possible. We therefore invite you to be one of our authors, and in doing so share your important research findings with the global food science community.
