Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue is oriented toward the publication of works that analyze, from a technical, productive, or economic perspective, the innovation processes that have taken place in recent decades throughout the production chain of wood, cork, resin, and other forest products. The focus of the works can have a historical approach or refer to the current era. Research that addresses present and future trends in forest production will be especially well received.

Similarly, this Special Issue aims to be an interdisciplinary framework that brings together technical works, economic and productive analyses, sectoral or regional studies, and even humanistic and historiographical essays, provided that they are closely related to some of the thematic lines proposed in this monographic issue.

Climate change, carbon footprint, circular economy, or economic and environmental sustainability are topics with which the works presented for evaluation should explore. However, research that explores new uses and applications of forest resources are equally desirable, especially if the implications derived from them are addressed in the aforementioned terms.
