Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Fertilizer use in eucalyptus and pine plantations has trends, which are similar to some agricultural production systems, mainly in tropical and subtropical areas. The knowledge base for the nutritional diagnosis and the development of fertilizer prescriptions that optimize production are relevant questions that drive research in several countries regarding tree species. However, there is a lack of information about ecophysiological answers and their relationship with fertilizer prescriptions. This Special Issue focuses on research results and methods for nutritional diagnosis and fertilizer prescriptions and their effects on ecophysiological properties in Eucalyptus and Pine plantations.
