

Special Issue

Sustainable Transportation and Quality of Life

Message from the Guest Editors

The relationship between transport and quality of life is becoming increasingly significant as urbanization accelerates, mobility needs evolve, and sustainability becomes central to global policy agendas. This Special Issue of Future Transportation is dedicated to exploring how transportation systems—when designed with foresight, inclusivity, and innovation—can enhance individual well-being, social equity, environmental sustainability, and urban livability. Our contributors, drawn from diverse disciplines and regions, present a rich tapestry of perspectives that span the theoretical, empirical, and applied dimensions of the transport–quality of life nexus. The articles herein will delve into topics such as active and accessible mobility, smart transportation technologies, public transport equity, mobility-as-a-service (MaaS), and their implications for health, social connectedness, economic opportunity, and environmental resilience.
