Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This special issue brings together current work on poverty, welfare and the family in C18th and 19th Britain. More than this, it aims to draw together several disparate themes which have the potential to shape the historiography in new directions. In particular, we are interested in commonalities and differences across the British Isles, in personalities and places in relation to welfare regimes, and in new sources and methods which can offer new insights for historian and genealogists alike.
