

Special Issue

Global Racialization, Class and the Politics of Nation: Tensions and Articulations in the Twenty-First Century

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to capture the global dynamics of the intersection between the process of racialization, social class and the political evocation of nationalist ideas and practices—in their broadest sense. The goal of this Special Issue is to publish cutting-edge work on how race, nation and class articulate, across the world, in the third decade of the twenty-first century. We therefore invite essays from scholars of social science and humanities disciplines on this topic. These pieces will engage critically with the literature on nationalism by focusing on its internal tensions, around race and class, and analyze how states and/or citizens produce versions of the politics of nation deriving from such tensions. This is an attempt to add nuance to theories of the nation, underscore the articulation of the state and social movements' roles in developing racialized and classed versions of the nation and to set studies drawn from different parts of the world in dialog with one another.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Genealogy is a scholarly journal that provides a venue for academic, cutting-edge contributions to the interdisciplinary field of genealogy studies. We welcome contributions that examine genealogies of family lineage, use genealogical considerations and methods in examining other historical processes (including migration histories, personal, social, and national identities, and social institutions) or study the construction of genealogical narratives. The journal is also interested in biographical studies and their contribution to the understanding of broader social and historical phenomena.
