Community-Engaged Indigenous Research across the Globe

Message from the Guest Editors

Genealogy invites submissions for the "Community Engaged Indigenous Research Across the Globe" Special Issue. Despite most Indigenous communities experiencing colonization resulting in land and food trauma, depletion of cultural resources, and health/wellbeing; Indigenous communities have still retained and, or are actively reclaiming their ancestral cultural identities and practices to reestablish balance and health. Some topics may include the following:

- How do Indigenous communities and researchers operationalize engagement in culturally appropriate and ethical manners?
- Methods in which Indigenous communities engage within their environment and on the land to conduct research?
- Descriptions of innovative approaches to partnerships, research design, or interventions that increase cultural continuity and wellbeing;
- Use of community engaged/cbpr research to increase cultural continuity and health;
- Decolonizing approaches to community-engaged or community-based participatory research;
- Long-term impacts to communities who engage and participate in research.

About the Journal

Message from the Editorial Board

Genealogy is a scholarly journal that provides a venue for academic, cutting-edge contributions to the interdisciplinary field of genealogy studies. We welcome contributions that examine genealogies of family lineage, use genealogical considerations and methods in examining other historical processes (including migration histories, personal, social, and national identities, and social institutions) or study the construction of genealogical narratives. The journal is also interested in biographical studies and their contribution to the understanding of broader social and historical phenomena.
