

Special Issue

Reimagining Cultural and Educational Spaces: Land, Learning and Sustainability in the Digital–Intelligent Age

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue will collect papers that explore the role of cultural and educational spaces in sustainable development, examining their evolving functions, practices, and impacts. By highlighting the intersections of space, culture, education, and sustainability, this Special Issue will contribute to the journal's ongoing dialogue on the interdependence of human and environmental systems. This Special Issue will welcome manuscripts that discuss the following themes:

- The transformation of cultural and educational spaces under digital–intelligent and global transitions;
- Cultural and educational spaces as drivers of sustainable urban and rural development;
- Place-making, identity, and memory in cultural and educational infrastructures;
- Comparative and cross-cultural studies of cultural and educational spaces in different contexts;
- Governance, policy, and planning dimensions of cultural and educational sustainability;
- Innovative practices and case studies demonstrating cultural and educational contributions to sustainable development.

We welcome both original research articles and review papers that address these themes from diverse disciplinary and methodological perspectives.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Geographies is an open access, cross-disciplinary journal that covers the physical features of the earth and its atmosphere, also including the human dimension. The scope of this journal is extremely wide, from the study of the various components that make up our planet, to the tools used to conduct these studies, to the human impacts that affect us all. All of these issues can be addressed at a variety of spatial and temporal scales from global to local and from a single point in time through eons. Geographies promotes a quest for knowledge and to finding solutions to many of our most pressing and timely issues to benefit our world.
