Depressive Disorder in the Elderly

Message from the Guest Editor

Depression in the elderly is a protean condition with a multiplicity of presentations and consequences. It is associated with numerous adverse outcomes for individual patients, including symptomatic chronicity, suicide, cognitive decline, excess disability, medical morbidity, poor quality of life, and institutionalization. Additionally, there are extensive social and financial costs. However, we know that contemporary pharmacological interventions do not bring a majority of patients into full remission. This Special Issue therefore focuses broadly on a wide range of issues relevant to geriatric depression: clinical presentation and course, pharmacological and innovative psychosocial interventions, costs and social implications. Submitted manuscripts describing current research, review articles and communications in any of these areas are sought.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Our new journal is launched to serve geriatrics specialists and colleagues from other disciplines as an interface between theory and clinical practice. Pushing the boundaries of the discipline, I kindly invite you to consider publishing your current work in Geriatrics. We have chosen the format of an open access journal to provide all interested parties with a platform for their basic research and health care studies as well. For details on the submission process or any other matter, please visit the journal website. I hope to handle your contribution to Geriatrics soon to publish innovative, relevant, thought provoking ideas.
