

Special Issue

Social Inequalities, Health Behaviours and Health-Related Well-Being across Populations

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to revisit and expand on extant evidence on the pathways and interconnections between social inequalities and health-related well-being across population groups, especially in LMICs. Papers that discuss contemporary issues on health-related inequalities/inequities relating but not limited to COVID-19, abuse and neglect, health literacy, social capital, health service under/utilisation and social welfare and care services are welcome. Submissions can focus on specific or a combination of some of these areas:

- Health inequalities and inequities;
- Ageing and health-related well-being;
- Welfare policies and health-related well-being;
- Health and healthcare policies;
- Health literacy;
- Social capital;
- Health behaviours;
- Rural and urban aspects of health and well-being;
- Work, workplace, and health;
- Ethnicity and health;
- Inequality in migrant and indigenes' health and well-being.
