Improving the Quality of Nursing: Focus on Palliative Care and End-of-Life Care

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to provide cutting-edge information in order to achieve the following:

- Enhancements in patient-centered care;
- Advancements in evidence-based practices;
- The fostering of multidisciplinary collaboration;
- Addressing ethical challenges;
- The promotion of education and training;
- The promotion of quality-improvement initiatives;
- Providing data, information, and directions that are useful in suggesting policy changes in this field of healthcare.

I encourage researchers, practitioners, and educators in the field of nursing to submit their original research articles, reviews, case studies, or empirical studies for consideration in this Special Issue. All submissions should follow the journal's guidelines and will undergo rigorous peer review. Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Symptom management and pain control;
- Communication and ethical decision making;
- Cultural competence and diversity;
- Integrating technology;
- Education and training;
- Quality assurance and measurement;
- Methodological issues concerning the research in question.
