Editorial Board Members' Collection Series: Environmental Risk Assessment and Health Outcome

Message from the Guest Editors

The aim of this Special Issue is mainly to collect papers considering the role of personal exposure in environmental risk assessment studies and the methods that are used to assess it at the finest possible level. The papers could be original studies or reviews of the scientific literature; they could describe an epidemiological study in which this topic is addressed or they could be methodological articles or even commentaries. Finally, papers considering inequalities in environmental exposure are also welcome.
