Midwifery Care: Improvement of Maternal and Newborn Health

Message from the Guest Editors

Midwifery care has an essential contribution to high-quality maternal and newborn services. In order to further develop new midwifery care approaches at clinical settings and community, directed by research outcomes, and reinforce the midwifery care quality worldwide, this Special Issue of Healthcare aims to emphasize in the a) assessment of existed midwifery-led models and compare them with new ones, b) measurement of the effectiveness of midwifery-interventions for timely prevention or management of complications in reproductive period, c) assessment of women and partners' needs, experiences and satisfaction from midwifery practice, d) research of best midwifery practices that enhance the understanding of the interaction between mother's psychosocial/physical health and newborn/infant's health, e) highlight of recent advances and challenges in the provision of midwifery care. We look forward to receiving your contributions on the above topics.
