

Special Issue

Health Disparities in Perinatal Epidemiology and Access to Healthcare

Message from the Guest Editor

The World Health Organization has outlined a roadmap to a “world in which every woman, child and adolescent in every setting realizes their rights to physical and mental health and well-being, has social and economic opportunities, and is able to participate fully in shaping prosperous and sustainable societies.” This Special Issue of Healthcare seeks commentaries, original research, reports, and reviews on inequities and disparities in maternal and child health and access to healthcare services across the perinatal period, broadly defined here as pregnancy through to the first year postpartum. This Special Issue aims to inform global development targets, as well as emergent needs and changes in health policies which are currently undergoing rapid transition. We envision that policy and decision makers at national and global levels will use the information published in this Special Issue as a resource to monitor change, target resources towards vulnerable populations, and develop progressive health policies.
