

Special Issue

Integrated Rehabilitation Services: From Clinical Settings to Communities and Homes

Message from the Guest Editor

Rehabilitation services have undergone a profound transformation, driven by the need to expand access, integrate the use of technologies, promote continuity of care, and strengthen the connections between different levels of healthcare. Integrating rehabilitation services requires an understanding of the therapeutic process as a continuum in which the patient transitions between different care settings (hospital, outpatient services, community, and home) in a coordinated, safe, and effective manner. This integrated approach requires innovation in public policies, the reorganization of care flows, the use of digital health technologies (such as telerehabilitation), and the strengthening of collaborative networks between professionals, patients, families, and communities. We welcome studies addressing assessment and intervention strategies, service organization, professional training, assistive technologies, evidence-based practices, and community initiatives that promote continuity and effective care. We invite researchers, clinicians, managers, and health and rehabilitation professionals to submit scientific articles for consideration for this Special Issue.
