

Special Issue

Building the Continuum of Care for Pregnant Women and Young Families

Message from the Guest Editors

The concept behind this Special Issue is rooted in the fundamental idea of providing human-centered, high-quality ongoing healthcare to expectant mothers, families and their infants. In today's evolving healthcare landscape, bridging the gaps in antenatal, intrapartum and postnatal care is crucial to achieving the well-being of both mother and family. We encourage authors to explore innovative approaches, evidence-based practices, and policy frameworks that aim to enhance the entire spectrum of care for pregnant women, ensuring a healthy pregnancy, safe childbirth, and smooth transition into parenthood. Manuscripts under this theme could delve into topics such as antenatal and intrapartum care, antenatal education, midwifery-led continuity of care, maternal mental health care, postpartum care strategies, pediatric healthcare initiatives, community engagement, digital health solutions, etc. By addressing these aspects, our aim is to create a holistic, supportive, and empowering environment for expectant mothers and young families, ultimately improving maternal and child health outcomes.
