Auditory Processing Disorder: A Forgotten Hearing Impairment

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue focuses on this largely forgotten hearing impairment, while aiming to document both its diversity and its close relationship with cognition. This Special Issue will feature original research, reviews and short reports focused on (1) APD in children, (2) APD in adults, (3) APD and cognition, (4) APD and mental health, (5) APD diagnostics and (6) APD management. Thematology will not be limited in an attempt to present APD in a realistic way. Evidence-based papers from different countries illustrating similarities and differences on test verbal stimuli are encouraged. Different aspects of APD including developmental, neural and mental comorbidities demonstrate the need for a multidisciplinary approach in the management planning of this hearing disorder. Linguistic aspects may play a role and, in that sense, research on multilingual clinical populations are encouraged.
