Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to explore sustainable methodologies, tools and strategies for resilience strengthening of cultural heritage at risk under climate change through an interdisciplinary and multi-sectorial approach. Research contributions may include (but are not limited to) the following themes:

- Climate change impacts on cultural and natural heritage;
- Damage evaluation through application of the data from earth observations and climate models;
- Developments and applications of damage functions and modeling;
- Sustainable solutions for protection and conservation under the changing climate;
- Measures and strategies for the prevention and safeguarding of cultural heritage;
- User-driven approaches and tools to support public authorities and private organizations in the decision-making process to safeguard cultural heritage at risk.
