Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Historical Research

Message from the Guest Editors

The integration of Artificial Intelligence (AI) into various disciplines is reshaping traditional methodologies, and the field of history is no exception. Historians are increasingly utilizing AI not only as a supportive tool but also as an autonomous investigative partner, prompting a reevaluation of historical research and writing practices. This Special Issue seeks to explore the multifaceted implications of AI in history writing, including methodological transformations, ethical considerations, and the future trajectory of the discipline.
