Imagining a Decolonial Future through Indigenous Activism

Message from the Guest Editor

The journal Humanities, an open-access online publication, is calling for papers whose topics explore these past and future “cracks in history” over the long arc of settler colonial presence in North America. We especially invite authors who think critically about these movements, placing them in historical and literary perspective, and framing them within traditional Indigenous practices, and using Native American and Indigenous studies methodologies to unpack their significance. In this sense, we are not seeking papers on armed or militant resistance, but rather on social movements, writings, individual actions, artistic innovations, the formation of collaborative networks, or other cultural coalitions within Indigenous communities that have worked, or are working, to bring about improved conditions for change. These movements might pertain to social conditions, sovereignty, environmental justice, MMIW, Land Back, Standing Rock, Indian boarding school histories and repatriation, etc.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

We welcome contributions that address fundamental issues in the Humanities from any meaningful perspective, combining past and present concerns in order to blaze a path toward the future. Interdisciplinary approaches are particularly welcome. All submissions will be critically reviewed by peers, aiming for the highest possible scholarly level. Being an online journal, the published papers will reach their desired audiences faster, more reliably, and much more easily than traditional print versions, while upholding the same, if not even higher, scholarly standards.
