Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Bullying and cyberbullying are among the most important social and public health issues worldwide, threatening young people's physical and emotional safety. Bullying can happen anywhere, including online, at school, in the workplace, or at home. It can lead to bodily harm, emotional distress, and deprivation of rights.

This Special Issue seeks papers on various subjects, including school bullying, cyberbullying, school violence, peer relationships, teacher–student relation, family cohesion, parenting behaviors, sibling relationships, and risk factors in bullying and cyberbullying among children, adolescents, or young adults. We welcome contributions from across the world.
