Experiencing the City: The Relation between Urban Design and People's Wellbeing

Message from the Guest Editors

Therefore, this Special Issue seeks papers with new empirical findings on experiencing the urban environment and how this is related to people's wellbeing, as well as papers highlighting novel methods to measure and analyze momentary experiences in the city. We also welcome papers on urban interventions to increase citizens' wellbeing and high-quality systematic reviews related to experiencing the urban environment.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Addressing the environmental and public health challenges requires engagement and collaboration among clinicians and public health researchers. Scientific discoveries and advances in this research field play a critical role in providing a rational basis for informed decision-making toward control and prevention of human diseases, especially the illnesses that are induced from environmental exposure to health hazards.

IJERPH provides a forum for discussion of discoveries and knowledge in these multidisciplinary fields. Please consider publishing your research in this high quality peer-reviewed journal.
