Protein misfolding and the resulting oligomers and aggregates are implicated in various neurodegenerative diseases. At a molecular level, some of these species may be key neurotoxic agents. Experimental and computational analysis of these systems is an active field of great contemporary importance for ageing populations. This Special Issue will feature contributions from groups investigating misfolding at every level of detail, from initial misfolding to aggregation and the formation of larger amyloid aggregates. Original research articles and review papers elucidating how protein misfolding and the resulting oligomers and aggregates are implicated in various neurodegenerative diseases are very welcome from outstanding experts of the topic.
