Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to provide an overview of new strategies and solutions with the aim of developing new materials to be used in medical applications and in food packaging. Researchers are invited to contribute original research and review articles focusing on transdisciplinary aspects related to: i) identifying renewable resources to synthesize new materials; ii) the study of sustainable production processes and technologies for biobased and biodegradable materials; iii) exploiting wastes as a source of monomers for the synthesis of new biobased and biodegradable materials.

The visibility and impact of these works will be promoted through the open-access platform of the journal.
