Novel Trends in the Research of Molecules Involved in Skin Inflammation and Dermatologic Conditions

Message from the Guest Editor

The aim of this Special Issue is to present novel trends on research of molecules involved in skin inflammation and dermatologic conditions, including chronic inflammatory skin diseases such as atopic dermatitis, psoriasis, contact dermatitis, acne, chronic urticaria, chronic wounds, rosacea, seborrheic dermatitis, prurigo, lichen, hidradenitis suppurativa, and others, as well as to gather research on current trends, recent advances, and future perspectives in the management of inflammatory skin diseases and other dermatologic conditions. In addition, we would like to present data on new therapies in this medical field, with exciting data that can help practitioners and patients. I look forward to receiving your contributions through your original research or reviews.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

The International Journal of Molecular Sciences (IJMS, ISSN 1422-0067) is an open access journal, which was established in 2000. The journal aims to provide a forum for scholarly research on a range of topics, including biochemistry, molecular and cell biology, molecular biophysics, molecular medicine, and all aspects of molecular research in chemistry. IJMS publishes both original research and review articles, and regularly publishes special issues to highlight advances at the cutting edge of research. We invite you to read recent articles published in IJMS and consider publishing your next paper with us.
