Progress in the Use of Graphene and Graphene-Like Materials in Various Applications

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue in IJMS welcomes outstanding innovative contributions presenting the methods of preparation, modification, and application of porous carbons, especially graphene, but also others: carbon black, glassy carbon, activated carbon, graphite, diamond, fullerenes, carbon nanotubes, carbon dots, and carbon-based hybrids. Other porous carbon-based materials, in addition to those mentioned, are also of interest. We also welcome contributions that review key trends and topics in the field of porous carbon-based materials. This Special Issue is open to original research articles, as well as review papers, with the aim of educating researchers worldwide on the latest trends and progress in the graphene materials research field.
