MicroRNA in Cardiac Health and Disease

Message from the Guest Editors

Development of heart and cardiac function is a highly spatiotemporal regulated process which actively involves miRNA control. During the last 10 years, alterations in the expression of tens of miRNAs have been described for different cardiovascular diseases (CVDs) such as hypertrophy, arrhythmias, and infarction but also in inherited cardiomyopathies. This Special Issue, entitled “MicroRNA in Cardiac Health and Disease,” of IJMS will cover a selection of recent research topics related to the role of miRNAs in health and disease with a special focus on state-of-the-art miRNA-based therapeutic strategies in CVD. Up-to-date review articles, commentaries, and experimental papers are all welcome.
