Oral Potentially Malignant Disorders and Oral Cancers: From Molecular Pathology to Therapeutic Approaches

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to bring together cutting-edge research focused on the molecular pathology of oral potentially malignant disorders (OPMDs) and oral cancer, along with translational approaches that can promote innovation in therapy. Our goal is to provide a platform for researchers, clinicians, and translational scientists to share insights that bridge the gap between molecular science and clinical application, ultimately fostering the development of more effective, personalized approaches to oral cancer prevention and treatment. We warmly invite you to contribute to this Special Issue and help shape the future of oral cancer management. Original research articles, comprehensive reviews, and short communications that explore molecular biomarkers, signaling pathways, proteomic and genomic alterations, tumor microenvironments, immune responses, microbiota, and the development of novel diagnostic or therapeutic strategies are all welcomed for evaluation in our Special Issue. By bridging fundamental science and translational innovation, this collection seeks to advance precision medicine approaches and improve outcomes for patients with oral cancer.
