Current Challenges in Heart Failure and Cardiac Transplantation

Message from the Collection Editors

This Topical Collection will contain a selection of papers highlighting the current challenges in heart failure and cardiac transplantation. We welcome the submission of original research (basic research or clinical research), short communications, and review manuscripts focusing on the diagnosis, risk factors, treatment, and prognosis of as well as novel approaches to cardiac arrhythmias, cardiac pacemakers, cardiac resynchronization therapy, cardiomyopathies, congenital heart defects, heart failure, heart transplantation, implantable cardioverter-defibrillators, mechanical circulatory support, and ventricular assist devices. About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

The primary goal of the Journal of Cardiovascular Development and Disease (JCDD, ISSN 2308-3425) is to provide cardiovascular scientists a platform to publish their work in a quick and efficient way. Topics can range from studies designed to decipher the events underlying early heart development to studies focusing on the origins of congenital and acquired heart disease. Papers submitted to JCDD undergo a fast, yet thorough, peer-review process. In this process, we will apply strict ethical policies and standards. JCDD guarantees fast dissemination of results to a large scientific audience
