

Special Issue

Feature Review Papers in Cardiovascular Clinical Research

Message from the Guest Editor

Call for Submissions We invite all researchers active in cardiovascular clinical research to submit their papers, including a detailed review of clinically relevant cardiovascular topics. The review may include topics related to the diagnosis or treatment of cardiovascular disease. Reviews of available data based on patient-level or study-level are warmly welcome. With this Special Issue, we like to combine detailed review papers of different cardiovascular clinical topics. We also encourage to submit review papers on interventional therapy, including peripheral arteries, cerebral arteries, coronary or structural interventions, as well as review papers focused on rehabilitation or post-interventional medical treatment.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

The primary goal of the Journal of Cardiovascular Development and Disease (JCDD, ISSN 2308-3425) is to provide cardiovascular scientists a platform to publish their work in a quick and efficient way. Topics can range from studies designed to decipher the events underlying early heart development to studies focusing on the origins of congenital and acquired heart disease. Papers submitted to JCDD undergo a fast, yet thorough, peer-review process. In this process, we will apply strict ethical policies and standards. JCDD guarantees fast dissemination of results to a large scientific audience.
